

Obama pushes high schools to expand job training programs

President Obama hailed the extraordinary comeback story of Worcester Technical High School during the school's commencement address on Wednesday, telling the graduates, "I want the nation to learn from Worcester Tech."

"I'm here today because there is nothing ordinary about Worcester Tech or the Class of 2014," he said. "You have set yourselves apart. This high school has set itself apart."